

Internal and External

Internal Latin – inter 'between or among' therefore not really 'inside'
So we get international, interactive, intervene etc
Intra is Latin for in, inside – intravenous, intra-cellular, (introverted?)
(I thought interr in terra, bury in the ground, might really fit but no, it's different)

External Latin – externus 'outside, outside of' has no apparent idea of between or among – it's definite
So we get externalise, externalism but not much else

Divine aspect

The Divine such as it is in itself does not have an internal and an external (no possible diagram!)

It simply is – I like to think about the isness business.

Jehovah – Yehowah – I am that that I am – Being.

The Divine does not send out, extend, have dual aspects, produce.

It is and it manifests – it creates and it is absolutely in (between and among') what it creates

This is sometimes hard for us, being finite

So the phrase the Divine Human is helpful – or the Divine in what is human or able to be known by human beings.

Examples of the DH would include creation, the incarnation, the Word, the human form, the processes of the human mind etc.

The Divine is in them and because of that they are as they are.

Human aspect

For us, being finite, we have the appearance of an internal and an external

This is not us being lesser – it is a Divine provision (perhaps to stop us going mad!)

Forms of our internal and external appearance

Spirit and body – notice though how some things bridge between the two

Feelings and thoughts relationship

Awareness of being and living internally and being and living externally

How external activity (like sex) can be a carrying through from internal to external

The teaching is that both of them connect or interrelate (see top...)

An internal needs an external

An external needs an internal

A mere internal creates incompleteness such as abstraction

A mere external creates a meaningless form or action

When they are one, they are divine! The Divine is Divine Humanly present

When they are hypocritical they are an infernal internal. The Divine is present but...
